Greeting from Sandy Garrett
Chief Disciplinary Counsel, Board of Professional Responsibility

“I’m not a cat.” (Link to video) One attorney’s struggle to remove a filter during a zoom hearing gave us smiles and taught us these lessons: be competent with technology and professional and compassionate in dealing with others. I am grateful that during the pandemic, Board of Professional Responsibility staff have been able to work remotely and in the office to assist lawyers and judges with registration, ethics questions and continuing legal education while also protecting the public by investigating and prosecuting complaints of misconduct. Stay well and take care.
2021 Ethics Workshop

The Board of Professional Responsibility is excited to announce the return of the Ethics Workshop. After a brief hiatus in 2020 due to the pandemic, the Board is hosting the 2021 Ethics Workshop on November 12, 2021 in a hybrid format. As always, attendees will have the opportunity to earn 6.5 dual CLE credits. Tickets will go on sale via Eventbrite in early August 2021. Once tickets are on sale, an email will be sent to all Tennessee attorneys with instructions to register. Stay tuned for more details in the coming months. Updates will be posted to the Board’s website (www.tbpr.org).

It’s Not My Problem . . . Or Is It?
Buddy Stockwell
Executive Director, TLAP

In the last five years, TLAP and other state LAPs have witnessed a national mental health and well-being movement in the legal profession. Across the nation, courts, bar associations, and bar counsel have come together to both acknowledge and address the severe mental health and wellness concerns that are now so prevalent in our profession.

Fortunately, the stigma associated with reaching out for help with mental health issues is waning somewhat, but there are still major barriers that must be overcome if we are to really heal our profession.

One barrier is presented when people fail to acknowledge that mental health issues such as addiction and depression are actual diseases. They may say something like “that person chose to drink too much alcohol and it’s their fault they became an alcoholic, so why should it be my problem? They did this to themselves!” The truth is that no one chooses to drink too much and become an alcoholic, and willpower is ineffective in fighting the disease if you are unfortunate enough to have contracted it.

The common thread that runs through these types of viewpoints is an underlying tone of “it’s not my problem.”

Of course, people are certainly entitled to their viewpoints and TLAP fully respects that. But to those who may feel that the mental health of the profession is not their problem (simply because they are personally okay), we at TLAP encourage them to seriously reconsider that line of thinking.

The fact is that in the practice of law we often cannot choose who we will or won’t interact with, be it co-counsel, opposing counsel, or the judge presiding over the matter.

When there is an impaired professional in our ranks, and when we personally encounter them in a legal case, it can be severely problematic and stressful, tremendously costly to all involved, and can even block the path to the public’s access to fairness and justice.

An impaired or disruptive lawyer or judge is everyone’s problem.

I have practiced in large firm, small firm, and solo settings. During those years I encountered a few opposing counsel (and once in a very great while a judge) who were all extremely problematic to deal with. They all earned widespread reputations in the profession for being “difficult” on one end of the spectrum or the other. Either they were extremely aggressive and disruptive, or so passive that moving a case forward seemed impossible . . . and all while the rest of us simply did our best to make headway while weathering their troublesome behavior.

In such cases, there are also direct monetary costs visited upon our clients in the form of increased initial client retainers once the opposing lawyer has been identified as routinely disruptive and difficult, etc.
It is certainly an extremely touchy subject, but from a purely clinical viewpoint, it is more likely than not that some of these unusually disruptive professionals are impaired on some level by a mental health, addiction, or personality disorder issue that can drive such aberrant behavior.

Law, like any other industry, suffers significant harm from undiagnosed and untreated mental health issues such as alcoholism, drug addiction, and depression. According to the American Journal of Preventive Medicine, excessive drinking negatively impacts our bottom lines by as much as $223.5 billion annually.¹

As to drug addiction, the National Institute on Drug Abuse cites that drug use disorders (both illicit and prescription), are very costly to our nation “exacting more than $740 billion annually in costs related to crime, lost work productivity and health care.”²

Per the American Psychiatric Association Center for Workplace Mental Health: “Depression costs employers an estimated $44 billion each year in lost productivity. About half of employees with depression are untreated. Yet with proper treatment, people with depression can get better. The key is to help employees access effective care.”³

And while all of the above information demonstrates how we are all affected by the problems, TLAP encourages a shift in everyone’s viewpoint toward solutions and compassion for their brothers and sisters in the profession who, through no fault of their own, developed mental health issues under the pressures of practicing law. The ripple effect of recovery is powerful, and we all benefit from it.

In the legal profession here in Tennessee, TLAP is a key to effective care. TLAP is your highly specialized program that offers professional clinical assistance specifically tailored to the demanding needs of impaired lawyers and judges. Be it depression, addiction, an anxiety disorder, or some other mental health issue, TLAP can help that disruptive or disengaged lawyer get better, and that benefits all of us.

Early intervention is key to reducing consequences and damage to both the person and the profession. Of course, TLAP encourages people to reach out confidentially before a mental health issue ripens into a situation that includes both mental health challenges and allegations of unethical conduct and potential licensure issues. When someone receives confidential and effective clinical help from TLAP early on, the person, their family, their peers, their clients, the profession, and the public all benefit. Everyone wins.

But what about the cases where a person was not able to get help early on, and now they face disciplinary issues in addition to mental health issues? There is still powerful hope and help through TLAP to objectively demonstrate that the person has been reliably diagnosed, successfully treated, and is being monitored in such a way that fully supports their recovery and fitness to practice law. On December 30, 2020, the Commission on Continuing Legal Education (CLE) filed an amendment to Rule 21. The Supreme Court has established May 17, 2021 as the deadline for any interested person to file comments with the Court.

The Commission’s petition presents eight (8) proposals to the Court. To assist interested persons in understanding the proposals, each proposal is discussed below. The Commission hopes this discussion brings added clarity to the understanding of the Commission’s proposals.

1. The Proposal to Allow for Partial Year Exemptions

Since the inception of Rule 21, active attorneys have had a mandatory continuing legal education requirement. That requirement has been a “all or none” continuing legal education requirement. An attorney must earn and report the required number of credits in the correct category for each compliance year. This has been true without exception and without regard for any hardship the attorney may suffer, in particular medical impairments and surgical interventions needed by an attorney which renders the attorney unable to meet his or her CLE obligation. The Commission has engaged with attorneys having visual, ambulatory, neurological and other conditions. As a result of this knowledge the Commission seeks to bring some relief and equity to the rule in these types of situations. The Commission’s proposal is not intended to address life-long conditions and eliminate the CLE obligations of those attorneys. Rule 21, Section 3 has long addressed those attorneys with disabilities and already provides a process that those attorneys can use to address their needs.

2. Requests for Accommodations and Exceptional Relief

Rule 21, Section 2.04 grants the Commission the authority to grant exceptional relief for requests including requests for appropriate waivers, extensions of time, hardship, and extenuating circumstances. The current regulations under which the Commission operated does not address or provide any guidance for Commission Members or attorneys about the operation of Rule 21, Section 2.04 and 3.02 (a) and (b). The proposed rule change would give the Commission specific authority to develop regulations providing detailed information to provide guidance to the Commission, its staff, and attorneys. In anticipation of this request pending before the Court, the Commission had drafted and made available on its website a single combined form for attorneys to use to request relief.
3. Correcting the Omission from the 2019 Rule Change

The Commission’s request to amend Section 4.07(a) is a housekeeping provision intended to correct an unintended removal of a previously enacted authorization to provide CLE credit to attorneys serving on the BPR Board or any of its hearing committees. The Commission is asking the Court to revise this provision and return it to its original position within Rule 21. The Commission did not discover the omission of the BPR credit provision until it was comparing the proposed rule to the existing rule. Being unaware of the omission, the Commission had continued to allow CLE credit for BPR members and committee members and therefore there are not any attorneys who have suffered a loss of CLE credit. However, the Commission understands that its authority rests on the language of the rule and that it is necessary to restore this provision to continue to award this credit. The Commission also recognizes the degree of work being provided by these attorneys to assist the Court and the Board of Professional Responsibility in carrying out the disciplinary provisions of its mission.

4. Revised CLE Credit for Discretionary Credit

a) Pro Bono vs Indigent Defense Credit. Since its inception as part of Rule 21, the Commission has awarded CLE credit to attorneys who provide Court appointed pro bono work or pro bono work for organizations who are grantees under the Legal Services Corporation (LSC) Act, and pro bono mediation services. The list of such organizations has changed over the years as Tennessee LSC funded organizations have merged however the credit has always been available to attorneys since the Court mandated three (3) hours of ethics credit each compliance year. When the rule became effective on December 10, 1998, attorneys were required to provide eight (8) hours of pro bono work to qualify for one ethics credit. Later, on April 3, 2009, the Supreme Court decreased the requirement to five (5) hours of pro bono work for each CLE credit. In November of 2014, the Commission conducted an analysis of the impact of Pro Bono work and recommended that the reduced five (5) for one (1) requirement be made permanent.

b) Indigent Defense credit was allowed at a lower rate because attorneys who provided indigent defense work also were eligible to receive State compensation for their work. The Commission is aware that the State awarded compensation has never fully compensated these attorneys and has not kept up with the rate of inflation and without a COLA adjustment, the attorneys who provide indigent defense work have worked for many years at a rate that has been inadequate. The Commission is also mindful of the recent increase in the state rate being paid to attorneys who provide indigent defense. Despite the increase, the state rate still does not fully compensate these attorneys. It is the Commission’s hope that the increase in the amount of credit awarded for indigent defense to match the amount awarded for pro bono work will fill this void.)
c) As an agency of the Tennessee Supreme Court, the Commission operates at the pleasure of and the auspices of the Supreme Court. In reviewing the Court’s minutes and history of the award of CLE credit for Public Service work, the Commission became aware that the current public service credit was broader than intended based on the history of the discussions by the Court around this issue. The Commission takes the position that to carry out its mandate, the language of Rule 21 must be revised to carry out the original intent of the Court. Over the years the staff of the Commission has had conversations with present and past members of the Court and the messaging around this issue has always been that the discretionary credit is broader than the Court intended originally and present day.

5. Clarification Of Course Requirements

Section 5.01(f) clarifies that courses are accredited for a period of one year from the date of creation of the course and that the course can be re-accredited for an additional year so long as the course content is current. The Commission has used this same standard for course accreditation for over thirty (30) years.

In April, 2019, the Commission revised Rule 21 to specify twelve (12) activities that are eligible for live CLE credit. They are found at section 5.01(g)1-12.

5.01(g)1 deletes the reference to the section number of the Regulations which is being changed by the re-numbering of the proposed revised Regulations which will be submitted to the Supreme Court.

5.01(g)3 clarifies that ethics credit can only be earned for teaching at a law school. The Commission understands that business, corporate and other behavior directed at how to be a good corporate citizen may be included in the curriculum at other educational institutions. However, legal ethics are not the same as business, corporate or other ethical behavior. Continuing Legal Education’s focus on ethics is that which is focused on the legal obligations of attorneys.

The other changes to section 5.01(g) were discussed above under public service credit.

Section 5.01(h) simply corrects the case of the verb in the sentence from “is” to “are” and is housekeeping in nature.

6. Adding the New Provision to Clarify the Timing of Reporting of CLE Attendance

Attorneys who attend CLE programming have a right and expectation that credit for the course they have completed will be submitted to the Commission in a timely manner. CLE providers are aware of the compliance reporting deadlines in the states where they have courses accredited. They advertise those deadlines as part of the promotion of the CLE Courses they sell. Despite this knowledge, Commission staff see attendance reporting by some providers months and years after courses are completed. This late reporting has a direct and detrimental impact on attorney compliance. The Commission does not have any way of knowing when attorneys complete courses unless and until that information is reported to the Commission. Therefore, it is essential that attendance be reported in a timely manner. This new provision will ensure that there is no ambiguity about when attendance is to be reported.

Since the beginning of the requirement for mandatory continuing legal education, the Commission has provided reports to attorneys in a paper format. As time has passed, the Commission had heard complaints from attorneys who are being pushed by the growing and increasing impact of living in a society where everyone is being pushed to a paperless society. We are all aware of businesses who have discontinued mailing paper statements and who charge an additional fee to individuals who do not opt into electronic statements. These changes are driven by many factors including rapid and easy delivery and reduced economic cost (after implementation) and a growing desire of many individuals to find a simple, quick solution to the myriad demand placed on them as part of their daily lives. The Commission is sensitive to and sees the same pressures. As a result, the Commission placed a notice on its website several years ago alerting attorneys that the Commission was moving to electronic delivery of documents and encouraging them to make sure their electronic mail address on record with the Board of Professional Responsibility was accurate. As an adjunct to this notice, the Commission has been working with a team of developers to build out new capacity in the MCLE system which would track document delivery, retain copies of each report, update compliance records when information is updated and other essential actions. The MCLE system is linked to the Commission’s website. For over ten (10) years electronic notices have been delivered by e-mail notification through the Commission’s website notifying attorneys when course attendance posts to their record and when submitted attendance cannot be posted to their record due to insufficient funds on the attorney account to pay the posting fee. In addition, over 10 years ago, the Commission began to offer attorneys an electronic survey to claim non-resident exemption. Currently over 80% of non-resident attorneys choose this option. The Commission receives electronic messages from these attorneys stating how quick and easy the process is and thanking the Commission for offering this service.

The Commission has concluded that the time has arrived to take this next step with electronic delivery of compliance documents. Attorneys licensed in Tennessee have grown accustomed to electronic delivery of documents related to their licensure. The Department of Revenue moved to online payment of the professional privilege tax in January 2013. The Board of Professional Responsibility has offered online registration for an extended period of time and updated their online filing system in 2017. Both agencies charge attorneys additional fees for paper delivery of documents.

8. Requirement to Pay for Attendance at the time of Reporting.

For over ten (10) years Rule 21 has contained a provision requiring attorneys to pay for attendance at the time the attendance is submitted. The Rule has been silent about the requirement for providers. That has resulted in providers becoming more and more lax in making timely payments for attendance that is submitted. Rule 21 Section 8.02 establishes a deadline of thirty (30) days for providers to report an attorney’s attendance at a continuing legal education program. While it is reasonable and a common business practice to expect a provider to pay for that attendance at the time it is submitted, the staff of the Commission has observed that providers will submit attendance and fail to pay the reporting fee for months even after being sent reminders that the fee is due and that credits do not post to attorney records until paid. The new language makes it clear to providers that payment of attendance fees is required to assure that attorneys receive the benefit of reported attendance in a timely manner.

The Commission offers the proposed changes as part of its mission to monitor developments in the operation of Rule 21, to design, promulgate for discussion, test and recommend modifications to the Supreme Court and to propose changes to modernize the Rule in the best interest of all participants in the CLE process.
Responding to Online Criticism
Steven J. Christopher
Deputy Chief Disciplinary Counsel - Investigations
Board of Professional Responsibility

Purchasers of legal services are increasingly turning to the internet when seeking to find a lawyer, in the same manner as consumers of other goods and services. Research reveals that an internet search is now the most popular method of locating a lawyer.1 Thirty eight percent (38%) of those interviewed in a study by Findlaw.com and Thomson Reuters Corporation stated that they would search for a lawyer primarily through the internet.2 Twenty nine percent (29%) would seek a recommendation from a relative or friend, and ten percent (10%) would consult a local bar association.3 The yellow pages, previously a primary means of locating a lawyer, was only identified by four percent (4%) of respondents.4 A survey by Software Advice similarly revealed that seventy five percent (75%) of prospective clients would travel further to seek representation with an attorney with favorable online reviews over an attorney with negative reviews.5 Research further reveals that a greater percentage of persons view a lawyer’s website or do a general online search (eighty one percent (81%) and sixty three percent (63%), respectively) in seeking legal representation, than those who attempt to locate a lawyer through a referral from a friend or colleague.6

As online searches for legal representation become increasingly pervasive, negative online reviews by clients and third parties can materially impair a lawyer’s ability to attract new clients. However, unlike the providers of most other goods and services, a lawyer’s duty of confidentiality limits the way a lawyer may respond to online critics. While there is not yet any legal authority on point in Tennessee, the manner in which an attorney may respond to online negative reviews has been the subject of a number of formal ethics opinions, post prominently in ABA Formal Ethics Opinion 21-496 (2021), issued January 13, 2021.7 This article will provide an analysis of an attorney’s ethical responsibilities in connection with responding to negative online reviews, as well as a summary of best practices.

The Duty of Confidentiality

The principal ethical rule implicated in responding to negative postings by clients, former clients, and third parties, is confidentiality. For current clients, lawyers are prohibited from disclosing any information relating to the representation, unless the client gives informed consent to the disclosure, the disclosure is implicitly authorized to carry out the representation, or one of the grounds for permissive or mandatory disclosure codified at RPC 1.6(b)-(c) applies.

The disclosure of information relating to the representation of a former client is governed by RPC 1.9. A lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter reveal information relating to the representation of the client unless the former client gives informed consent in writing, disclosure would be permissible or required with respect to a present client under RPC 1.6, or the information has become generally known. The distinction between a lawyer’s confidentiality obligations to current and former clients in the context of online reviews will be discussed in greater detail below.

The confidentiality rule is broadly construed to include information obtained from any source, not just the client. Consequently, the duty of confidentiality is far broader in scope than attorney-client privilege, which applies only to communications between lawyers and clients for the purpose of providing legal advice or representation. The prohibition not only applies to disclosures of information relating to the representation, but any disclosure that could reasonably lead to the discovery of such information by a third party. Additionally, disclosure is narrowly construed and only permitted to the extent reasonably necessary to accomplish one of the enumerated exceptions. Consequently, before exercising any ground of permissive or mandatory disclosure, the lawyer should give significant thought to whether the disclosure is reasonably necessary to effect the purpose of the exception to disclosure, and whether the objective could be effected by other means.

Within the context of online reviews, an attorney’s duty of confidentiality is therefore implicated by any statement by the lawyer regarding a client that discloses information relating to the representation. Consequently, as an attorney is prohibited from disclosing information relating to the representation, an attorney’s duty of confidentiality will attach to any online review regardless of whether the reviewer is a current or former client.

Attorneys Are Strongly Discouraged from Seeking a Client’s Waiver of Confidentiality Permitting a Response to a Negative Review

As indicated above, RPC 1.6(a) provides that an attorney may disclose information relating to the representation if the client provides informed consent. However, from a practical standpoint, it can be safely assumed that a client who posts a negative review will not be receptive to an attorney’s request that the client to waive confidentiality in order to permit the attorney to post a response which will likely include information disparaging to the client. Additionally, prospectively obtaining a client’s blanket waiver of confidentiality at the commencement of the representation or otherwise prior to the circumstances that result in the negative review would not be feasible considering the requirements for obtaining a client’s informed consent.

“Informed consent” is defined as “the agreement by a person to a proposed course of conduct after the lawyer has communicated adequate information and explanation about the material risks of and reasonably available alternatives to the proposed course of conduct.” RPC 1.0(e). A client’s confidentiality waiver is not required to be reduced to writing.  However, the guidance provided for obtaining informed consent in the comments to RPC 1.0 places a very high burden on the attorney.  It would not be sufficient, for example, for a lawyer to merely include generalized language in their fee agreement permitting the lawyer to respond to a negative posting if subsequently made by the client. A lawyer seeking informed consent where required under the Rules of Professional Conduct is instead required to provide reasonably sufficient information to the client with regard to their waiver to permit them to make an informed decision. Ordinarily, this will include consultation with the client that explains the advantages and disadvantages of the proposed waiver, and a discussion of reasonable alternatives. In some circumstances, this consultation will require the advisability of seeking the advice of independent counsel.

At the commencement of the representation, the specific circumstances regarding the attorney’s conduct which ultimately leads to a negative posting could not yet be known or anticipated. Consequently, the lawyer would not be in a position to obtain informed consent to the waiver of information relating to the representation, as the information at issue would not yet be known. Under these circumstances, it is simply not feasible for a lawyer to fulfill the lawyer’s obligations in seeking an informed waiver of the client’s confidentiality for the purpose of posting a negative review.

The Disclosure of Information for Purposes of Responding To Negative Online Postings Regarding Current Clients Does Not Fall Within Any Permissive or Mandatory Exception to Tennessee’s Confidentiality Rule

Of the permissive and mandatory grounds for disclosure of information relating to an attorney’s representation of a client defined at RPC 1.6(b)-(c), the only ground that would potentially permit an attorney to respond to online reviews is RPC 1.6(b)(5), which states as follows:

A lawyer may reveal information relating to the representation of a client to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client, to establish a defense to a criminal charge or civil claim against the lawyer based upon conduct in which the client was involved, or to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer’s representation of the client.\textsuperscript{23}

While not directly on point, the discussion regarding informed consent for conflict waivers at Comments [20] and [22] of RPC 1.7 is also instructive.*

While this exception has not been the subject matter of a formal ethics opinion in Tennessee, the applicability of this exception to negative online reviews has been analyzed by legal authorities in a number of jurisdictions, most notably by the American Bar Association in ABA Formal Ethics Opinion 21-496.\textsuperscript{24} The overall conclusion reached by the ABA Committee was that the exception was inapplicable to an attorney responding to online negative reviews, and that as no other permissive or mandatory ground for disclosure applies, attorneys are strictly prohibited from disclosing any information relating to the representation solely to respond to a negative online posting.\textsuperscript{25}

The ABA Committee reasoned that a negative online review, standing alone, does not constitute a “controversy” between a lawyer and client, due to its “informal nature.”\textsuperscript{26} Likewise, ABA Committee argued that the term “proceeding” in Model Rule 1.6(b)(5) is limited to a matter pending before a tribunal.\textsuperscript{27} Additionally, even to the extent that a client’s grievance aired on an internet platform could be construed as a controversy within the scope of Model Rule 1.6(b)(5), a response by the attorney would not be reasonably necessary to establish a claim or defense by the lawyer.\textsuperscript{28} For example, a client posting false claims might provide the lawyer with a potential claim for defamation.\textsuperscript{29} A responsive posting is not required as a precondition to filing suit, and the lawyer could pursue other means of addressing the posting, such as a demand letter sent privately to the client requesting that the post be amended or deleted.

Formal ethics opinions from other jurisdictions have reached the same conclusion as the ABA Committee in their analyses.\textsuperscript{30} For example, the Pennsylvania State Bar Ethics Committee concluded that an online dispute between lawyer and client regarding the lawyer’s legal services is not a “controversy” and no “proceeding is pending or imminent just because the client impugns the lawyer online.”\textsuperscript{31} The State Bar of Texas likewise concluded that the exception relating to \textsuperscript{29} The issue of a lawyer filing a defamation claim against a client for negative online postings is outside the scope of this article. While the Tennessee Rules of Professional Conduct do not directly address the issue, lawyers should exercise extreme care in fully considering the implications of threatening or filing suit against clients in light of their ethical requirements.

\textsuperscript{30} See, e.g., New York State Ethics Op. 1032 (lawyer prohibited from disclosure of confidential information just to respond to only criticism); Pa. Ethics Op. 2014-200 (lawyer may not give detailed response to online criticism of the lawyer by a client; the self-defense exception is not triggered solely by a negative online review); W. Va. Legal Ethics Op. 2015-02 (lawyer may respond to online reviews but may not disclose confidential information while doing so); Los Angeles County Ethics Op. 525 (lawyer can respond online to a client’s disparaging comments only if confidential information is not disclosed); Fla. Bar Ethics Op. 20-01 (lawyer may not disclose information relating to a client’s representation in response to a negative online review); State Bar of Tex. Professional Ethics Comm. Op. controversies between lawyer and client “only applies to formal actions, proceedings, or charges” and “cannot reasonably be interpreted to allow public disclosure of a former client’s confidences just because a former client has chosen to make negative comments about the lawyer.” 32

Only two jurisdictions, Colorado and the District of Columbia, have reached a contrary result. In Colorado, Colorado Ethics Op. 136 (2019), the Colorado Ethics Committee concluded that online criticism could potentially rise to the level to constitute a “controversy.” 33 However, the drafters encouraged the exercise of caution for attorneys in the information ultimately disclosed. 34 This Opinion was cited and discussed unfavorably in the ABA Formal Ethics Op. 496. 35

The District of Columbia’s conclusion potentially permitting disclosure of information in response to online reviews appears to arise out the fact that this jurisdiction’s confidentiality rules provides broader grounds for disclosure. 36 The District of Columbia’s Rule 1.6(e)(3) provides that a lawyer may “reveal client confidences to the extent reasonably necessary to respond to specific allegations by the client concerning the lawyer’s representation of the client.” 37 However, the opinion cautioned that this confidentiality exception excludes “general criticisms” of an attorney and cautioned that “disclosures should be no greater than the lawyer reasonably believes necessary.” 38

Attorneys who disclose confidential information run the risk of being sanctioned by their disciplinary authority. Attorneys who have disclosed information relating to the representation of a client in responding to negative online postings have been disciplined for doing so in a number of jurisdictions. 39 Appellate Courts have consistently declined to find any applicable exception to confidentiality in their jurisdiction’s rules to warrant disclosure of client information. 40

The Disclosure of Information Regarding Former Clients Also Prohibited

The ABA Committee as well as state jurisdictions analyzing the propriety of attorneys responding to negative reviews have generally not drawn a distinction between disclosure for purposes of current and former clients, concluding that disclosure is improper regardless of whether the representation has concluded. However, Tennessee’s Rule of Professional Conduct 1.9(c), which governs the scope of confidentiality with regard to former clients, differs from ABA Model Rule 1.9(c), which has been adopted in most jurisdictions. A separate discussion of whether attorneys are permitted to respond to negative online postings within the context of Tennessee’s confidentiality rule regarding former clients is thereby warranted.

Tennessee’s RPC 1.9(c) states as follows:

A lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter or shall not thereafter reveal information relating to the representation or use such information to the disadvantage of the former client unless the former client gives informed consent, confirmed in writing, the disclosure would be required or permissible with regard to a current client, or the information has become generally known. [Emphasis added].

The ABA Model Rule 1.9(c), in contrast, states as follows:

A lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter or whose present or former firm has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter: (1) use information relating to the representation to the disadvantage of the former client except as these Rules would permit or require with respect to a client, or when the information has become generally known; or (2) reveal information relating to the representation except as these Rules would permit or require with respect to a client. [Emphasis added].

Tennessee’s rule provides for a broader exception to confidentiality for former clients than the Model Rule. Tennessee’s rule permits an attorney to both use or reveal information relating to the representation of a former client, even where such information is disadvantageous, if the former client provides informed consent, if the disclosure would be authorized with regard to a present client under RPC 1.6, or where the information has become “generally known.” Unlike Tennessee’s rule, the Model Rule distinguishes between the information that may be “used” or “revealed” with regard to the former client. Information may be used to the disadvantage of the former client when the information is “generally known,” but the Model Rule does not permit the attorney from “revealing” the information when generally known.

When an attorney posts a response to a negative review where information relating to the representation is disclosed, the attorney is revealing the information at issue, not merely using the information. Consequently, under the ABA Model Rule, the “generally known” exception is inapplicable and as a result, there was no need for the ABA Committee or those of other jurisdictions adopting the Model Rule to separately discuss the implications of the generally known standard.

The term “generally known” is not defined in the Tennessee Rules of Professional Conduct or in the Model Rules. However, the Comments to the Tennessee Rules of Professional Conduct and that of other jurisdictions would suggest that the term is very narrowly construed.

* Model Rule 1.9(c) is the majority rule in most jurisdictions. Research revealed forty-five jurisdictions that have either adopted the model rule or do not permit revealing information under the “generally known” exception in their RPC 1.9(c).

* RPC 1.9(c)(1)-(3).

* Model Rule 1.9(c).

* See RPC 1.9 Comment [8].

* RPC 1.9, Comment [8d]. Research did not reveal any substantive distinction between how “generally known” is construed for purposes of former clients in Tennessee and in other jurisdictions.
information is public record, standing alone, does not bring the information within the scope of “generally known.”

ABA Formal Opinion 479, “The Generally Known Exception to Former-Client Confidentiality,” provides guidance on the intended scope of this confidentiality exception. The ABA Committee states that information is generally known if the information is “widely recognized by members of the public in the relevant geographic area; or is widely recognized in the former client’s industry, profession, or trade.” The ABA Committee stated that information can become widely recognized, for example, when promulgated through traditional or online media sources, including social media. “Information that is publicly available is not necessarily generally known.”

The ABA Committee cited favorably the following definition from Roy Simon in New York Rules of Professional Conduct Annotated (2017):

> The phrase “generally known” means much more than publicly available or accessible. It means that the information has already received widespread publicity. For example, a lawyer worker on a merger with the Fortune 500 company could not whisper a word about it during the pre-offer stages, but once the offer is made—for example, once AOL and Time Warner have announced their merger, and the Wall Street Journal has reported it on the front page, and the client has become a former client—then the lawyer may tell the world. After all, most of the world already knows.

The ABA Committee’s narrow reading of “generally known” is mirrored by other jurisdictions in their formal ethics opinions and in other authorities.

While the “generally known” exception applies to the revelation of information regarding former clients, it will rarely, if ever, be applicable in the context of responding to negative online postings, particularly considering its narrowly construed meaning. The specific information that would be disclosed for an attorney to counter the information in a client’s negative posting would most likely involve conduct or communications by the attorney, the client, or third parties not part of the public record, let alone public knowledge to the degree contemplated by the reading of the “generally known” exception to the confidentiality rule.

To any extent that the information at issue would fall within the exception, the posting of information is nonetheless only permissible to the extent reasonably necessary and tailored to effect the purpose of disclosure. Attorneys should thereby exercise extreme caution in the reliance on this exception to disclosure for the purpose of responding to online reviews.

State Bar Op. 05-01 (2006) (“information is generally known if it is common knowledge in the community”).
While the disclosure of any information relating to the representation of a client for purposes of responding to an online review is prohibited, the ABA Committee and other legal authorities have provided suggestions for alternative ways of addressing negative client reviews. It is permissible for the lawyer to provide the reader with notice that due to their professional constraints under the applicable rules of confidentiality, the lawyer is prohibited from responding with specificity. Such a disclaimer avoids disclosure of any information relating to the representation while also providing confirmation to online readers that the attorney is prohibited from providing their side of the story.

While being very careful to avoid disclosing any information relating to the representation, a number of authorities have also argued that it is permissible for the lawyer, without disclosing confidential information, to make a generalized response that the post is inaccurate. The Texas Bar recommended the following sample response in its formal ethics opinion:

A lawyer’s duty to keep client confidences has few exceptions and out of an abundance of caution I do not feel at liberty to respond in a point by point fashion in this forum. Suffice it to say that I do not believe that the post presents a fair and accurate picture of the events.

Commentators on the subject of attorney responses to negative online reviews consistently suggest that it is a better course of action to approach the issue from a business and practical standpoint rather than an adversarial one. The ABA Committee and other commentators have specifically recommended that many times, no response is the best response. Commentators have argued that as any response will engender further responses in the review thread, particularly from the already angry reviewer, an attorney’s response will frequently cause the posting to be higher in the search results for a particular attorney when a prospective client searches for representation through a general online inquiry. On this basis, it may be the best course of action for an attorney to simply refrain from responding directly to the post.

Attorneys may also contact the client privately and request that the posting be removed or at least amended. As internet postings are often made while in a state of heightened emotion, there is a possibility that a client may have changed their position, particularly if provided with the attorney’s side of the story. Clients may be particularly receptive to removal or amendment of the post if the attorney apologizes for any errors in the handling of the matter that may have led to the negative review and offers to take appropriate remedial action.

The Practice Monitor shall assess Mr. Parsley’s case load, case management, trust account, compliance with trust account rules, accounting procedures, and office management procedures, in accordance with Tennessee Supreme Court Rule 9, Section 12.9(b). Mr. Parsley must pay to the Board all costs in the disciplinary proceeding.

Mr. Parsley engaged in a business transaction with a client and friend without properly informing them of the conflict of interest in violation of RPC 1.3 (diligence) and 1.8 (conflict of interest).

Mr. Parsley is immediately suspended from the practice of law and prohibited from using any indicia of lawyer, legal assistant, or law clerk or maintaining a presence where the practice of law is conducted. Mr. Parsley must notify all clients being represented in pending matters, as well as co-counsel and opposing counsel of the Supreme Court’s Order suspending his law license and shall deliver to all clients any papers or property to which they are entitled.

Mr. Parsley must comply with the requirements of Tennessee Supreme Court Rule 9, Sections 28 and 30.4, regarding the obligations and responsibilities of suspended attorneys and the procedure for reinstatement.
On October 2, 2020, the Tennessee Supreme Court suspended Stephen Kenneth Perry of Alexandria, Virginia from the practice of law for two (2) years, retroactive to the date of his January 2, 2019 temporary suspension pursuant to Tennessee Supreme Court Rule 9, Section 12.2(b). As a condition of reinstatement, Mr. Perry must pay restitution to his client and undergo a Tennessee Lawyers Assistance Program evaluation. Mr. Perry must pay the Board of Professional Responsibility’s costs and expenses and court costs within ninety days of the entry of the Order of Enforcement.

On July 30, 2019, the Board filed a Petition for Discipline against Mr. Perry. The Petition included one complaint of misconduct. The Hearing Panel found Mr. Perry essentially abandoned his client’s case and failed to respond to the Board in violation of Rules of Professional Conduct 1.3 (diligence), 1.4 (communication), 1.5 (fees), 1.16 (terminating representation), 3.2 (expediting litigation), 8.1(b) (bar admission and disciplinary matters) and 8.4(d) (conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice).

Mr. Perry shall comply in all aspects with Tennessee Supreme Court Rule 9, Sections 28 and 30.4, regarding the obligations and responsibilities of suspended attorneys and the procedure for reinstatement.

On March 1, 2021, the Tennessee Supreme Court suspended Richard Louis Reynolds from the practice of law until further orders of the Court pursuant to Tennessee Supreme Court Rule 9, Section 22.3. Mr. Reynolds pled guilty and was convicted of Misprision of a Felony in the matter of United States of America v. Richard Reynolds, Case No. 3:20-CR-00227-M(1), in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas Dallas Division. The Supreme Court’s Order is effective immediately.

Pursuant to the Order of the Supreme Court, the matter has been referred to the Board to institute formal proceedings to determine the extent of the final discipline to be imposed upon Mr. Reynolds as a result of his convictions of misdemeanors and a serious crime.

Mr. Reynolds must comply with the requirements of Tennessee Supreme Court Rule 9, Section 28, regarding the obligations and responsibilities of suspended attorneys.
On January 22, 2021, Winston Bradshaw Sitton, an attorney licensed to practice law in Tennessee, was suspended from the practice of law for four (4) years with one (1) year to be served as an active suspension and the remainder on probation by Order of the Tennessee Supreme Court. The Court further ordered Mr. Sitton to pay costs and expenses associated with the case.

On August 23, 2018, a Petition for Discipline was filed against Ms. Sitton concerning one complaint of misconduct. Mr. Sitton posted a series of public Facebook posts in response to a friend’s inquiry about the legality of carrying a weapon in her car. Mr. Sitton was aware that the friend had a very contentious and allegedly abusive relationship with the father of her child. In a series of Facebook posts responding to the question, Mr. Sitton told her that it was better to get a “taser” or “tear gas.” If she were to get a shotgun, he said, she should first fill it with rock salt, then bird shot, and then “load for bear.”

Mr. Sitton next posted: If you want to kill him, then lure him into your house and claim he broke in with intent to do you bodily harm and that you feared for your life. Even with the new stand your ground law, the castle doctrine is a far safer basis for use of deadly force.

Replying to Mr. Sitton’s post, his Facebook friend commented, “I wish he would try.” Mr. Sitton then posted: As a lawyer, I advise you to keep mum about this if you are remotely serious. Delete this thread and keep quiet. Your defense is that you are afraid for your life — revenge or premeditation of any sort will be used against you at trial.

A hearing panel found that Mr. Sitton violated Tennessee Rules of Professional Conduct 8.4(a) and (d), misconduct, and recommended that he be suspended from the practice of law for sixty (60) days.

The Tennessee Supreme Court exercised its discretion to review the discipline. Following a review of the record, the Court observed that practicing law is a privilege and lawyers in any setting — including on social media — are bound by the ethics rules. The Court held that had Mr. Sitton’s advice been followed, it could have led to a disastrous outcome and encouraging the Facebook friend to make premeditated use of force appear as self-defense was “grave misconduct.” Finally, the Court held that posting his bad advice publicly fostered a cynical perception that the judicial process is corrupt, and lawyers are co-conspirators who help clients manufacture fake defenses against criminal charges. Based on the Court’s review, the hearing panel’s proposed sanction of a sixty (60) day suspension was increased to a suspension of four (4) years with one (1) year to be served as an active suspension and the remainder on probation. Mr. Sitton must comply with Tennesssee Supreme Court Rule 9, Section 28 regarding the obligations and responsibilities of suspended attorneys and may not return to the active practice of law until an order of reinstatement has been entered by the Supreme Court.

Justice Holly Kirby authored the majority opinion for the Court and Justice Sharon Lee filed a separate opinion concurring in the increase in the sanction.

Ms. Caldwell met with the client in the Shelby County Jail but had not reviewed materials related to the client’s criminal case, had not filed any post-trial motions, had not entered an appearance with the criminal court, and had not begun the appeal process. Less than one month after the representation began, Ms. Caldwell’s representation was terminated and the client requested a refund of the unearned portion of the fee. Mr. Johannessen is the sole member of a limited liability company, and that company is a member of another company called FYI. On March 2, 2018, Mr. Johannessen was appointed by resolution as the attorney for FYI for particular issues. On October 15, 2018, Mr. Johannessen hired an attorney and filed an involuntary bankruptcy petition against FYI in his role as the sole member of the other limited liability company. On October 16, 2018, Mr. Johannessen then filed a notice of appearance in the bankruptcy proceeding, as a pro se creditor of FYI, alleging that there was a debt FYI owed him personally. The bankruptcy of FYI was later dismissed.

Mr. Johannessen’s filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition against FYI, in his role as the sole member of a limited liability company, after a resolution had been passed naming him as FYI’s attorney created a significant risk that the representation of his client would be materially limited by his interest as sole member of the other company. Mr. Johannessen’s subsequent notice to also appear on his own behalf in the bankruptcy, against FYI, created a significant risk that his representation of FYI and his personal interest concerning the other company would be materially limited by his personal interest as a creditor against FYI.

By these acts, Scott David Johannessen has violated Rules of Professional Conduct 1.7 (conflict of interest), 8.4(d) (prejudice to the administration of justice) and 1.1 (competence) and is hereby Publicly Censured.

The trial court subsequently awarded pre-judgment interest to the client in an additional amount of $22,092.10.
By these acts, Lawrence Buford Hammet, II has violated Rule of Professional Conduct 1.5 (fees) and 1.15(e) (safekeeping property) and is hereby Publicly Censured for these violations.
